AWARD EXHIBITION

August 17 – September 23, 2007

INDEX: AWARD EXHIBITION displays the designs shortlisted for INDEX: AWARD in a large-scale outdoor exhibition in central Copenhagen that will be officially opened on August 17.

Well over 100 large spheres will adorn Copenhagen's finest square, Kongens Nytorv, creating one of the most spectacular exhibition spaces ever seen. The spheres act as innovative display cases, exhibiting the top nominated designs 24 hours a day, and in the information centre on the square, you can see video footage of the designs.

The exhibition offers an exciting, amazing and visionary insight into the solutions created by designers to improve life for people around the world.

Divided into the five award categories BODY, HOME, WORK, PLAY and COMMUNITY, the exhibition will present designs relevant to all areas of human life and be equally inspiring for laymen and professionals, young and old.

The goal was to create an indoor architectural environment with the quality of an equivalent outdoor space. Exposed solid wood improves air and thermal indoor quality. Fresh air and sun is injected into the building through courtyards and roofs, that transmit ultraviolet light-thus the stay inside is equal to a healthy walk through a forest. Fresh bright wood inside is protected by an enclosure of Thermally Modified Timber, an all natural technology, which protects the tropical rainforests. The system has been prototypically developed for mentally disabled children, who are health wise most in need and able to experience with all the senses.
